Good bye, old years! sad words, yet or syrup is discontinued, all of these of- we must say them. Twelve months the pulse of time has throbbed steadily on, relentlessly stealing our present away, adding it, second by second, to the unreturning past, leaving us at each sueceeding period to meet the ever shifting scenes coming up before us from the illimitable future.

Shall we review the scenes of these lost days, and weeks, and months, ere we too give the parting word, spoken but once-and forever?

Yes, you came in the night time, when the unspotted snow covered mountain and plain, and the pale, silver moonbeams shone weirdest on cities, willinger slow and laboring pulse, and almost and wood. But soon returning sunlight drove the shadows from our sight, and unmindful of your presence, roused the daily toll and strife.
